Chapter 1 by Andrew Hartmann

One sunny day, a family went to a beach. The kids went into the ocean to play as the parents got tanned on the beach. What the kids or the parents didn't know, is that just off the coast was a huge great white shark that hasn't had a meal in days.

Chapter 2 by Aaron Hartmann

A boy saw the shark and he ran and told the lifeguard. The lifeguard said thank you and rang the shark bell. Everyone ran onto shore and got to safety. The lifeguard called the air force and they came in with fighter jets and blew the shark up. The family went home and had spaghetti for dinner.

The boy pipes up, "Daddy, why did they kill that fishy?"

"Well son, they killed that "fishy" or shark because it was going to eat you and everyone else you love."

"Okay" They all start eating again.

Later that night the boy had a dream about the shark.

The boy screamed as the great white's jaws clamped onto his leg, taking in the leg up to the thigh. The shark's razor-like teeth tore through the boy's flesh in one powerful bite.

Temporarily satisfied, the shark sped away with the tender limb floating between his teeth, tendrils of meat and veins limply waving in the water.

The boy managed to swim to shore and crawl back to his mother, trailing blood from the bloody stump of his leg.

"Mama, make the pain stop!" he cried, collapsing on the sand in front of his dramatized mother. "Just make it go away," Tears, blood, and sweat mixed on the child's face, distorting it until even his mother couldn't recognize him, and he just became a quivering, crippled body.

The attack on the boy had caused panic on the beach, and people were running in all directions to get away from the shark-infested waters. Cars hit innocent swimmers, splattering blood on the tires and windshield. There were fist fights in the road just to get a taxi, resulting in unconscious bodies in the street that were ground to a pulp by the tires of out of control cars. A group of tourists, desperate simply to get away from the gruesome injuries of the boy, ran into the ocean and started swimming.

The shark wasn't done yet. Life after life was taken by the massive shark, limbs and blood covering the shore. Twitching arms mixed with bloody hair and wet corpses in the sea.

And the shark swam away, finally satisfied.

Chapter 4 by Andrew Hartmann

A couple minutes later, the cops arrive just to see tens of dead bodies lying on the floor. One of the cops got sick to his stomach, he pulled out his 9mm pistol and started emptying shells into the ocean.

"Dude calm down!" One of the other cops screams at him.

Water and hands right on the beach. The shark was still there, its mouth wide open, waiting for another victim.

blasting the shark's head with their guns but it was no use. The shark started crawling towards them and ate them in one bite.

Then, out of nowhere, the shark stands up on his tail and starts walking and eating people on the shore. The shark swallowed whole cars, even buses packed full of people.

Then, the boy woke up...

Chapter 5 by Andrew Hartmann

When the boy woke up, he got out of bed and walked over to his parents room. He silently opened their door to check if they were still alive. Of course they were, it was just a stupid dream. A stupid dream that would haunt his dreams forever.

In the morning, when the boy was eating breakfast, he heard the news that his parents were watching in the other room. It said that several other huge great white sharks were spotted off the coast of Hawaii, which is where the boy lived.

"We're lucky we weren't there today." Said one of the boy's parents from the living room. The boy's dad then enters the room with an empty cereal bowl.

"Can sharks go on land?" The boy asks his father.

"What kind of idiotic question is that son?"

"Oh, in my dream last night, that's what happened."

"Well, you can feel safe knowing that sharks absolutely can not, or ever will be able to, walk on land."

Suddenly, past the boy's dad, out the window, the boy sees a humongous shark walking on its tail!

Chapter 7 by Panda Talks

But out the that dead shark's mouth came a small, green dwarf with huge eyes and the moustache of a 14 year old boy. This shark was actually a robot, and was a method of transportation for the dwarf. It could be controlled from the inside of the mouth by connecting a Sony PlayStation 2 controller to the shark's uvula. "Follow me if you wish to live," said the dwarf, firmly grasping the small boy's hand.

Chapter 8 by ArammarA

The boy climbed into the shark with the small man. It was a little bit crowded and really dark in the body, but the dwarf seemed to know what he was doing. After 27 minutes and 8 seconds of traveling by shark, the dwarf announced they had arrived at their location. The boy got out of the aquatic robot corpse and realized they were at a Chuck E. Cheese's. The midget raced inside. The boy soon realized the dwarf had a strange addiction to ski-ball. After playing ski-ball until the store closed and spending their tickets to buy 109 Tootsie-Rolls, they climbed back into the shark.
